

PLUNGED TO DEATH DESPITE HIS BRIDE WHO HELD TO HIM

Woman Clung to Man Swinging From Roof Until Strength Failed Her.

Andrew Kochruski, thirty years old, of No. 28 Green street, Jersey City, a Jeweler out of work, had been morose for several days. He feared that his bride, Mary, of a few months would suffer from lack of food and heat. They lived on the third floor of a ten-story tenement. This morning Andrew arose from bed and shouting "I'm going to do it," rushed from the apartment. The wife followed him to the roof. When the wife reached the roof she saw him standing on the edge. Just as he was about to plunge off she grasped him around the legs. The man fell forward, hanging half way over, but the wife, who had also fallen, held him firmly. For fully ten minutes she clung to him, meanwhile screaming loudly for aid. Below in the street hundreds of factory workers stopped and gazed aloft at the sight. Others ran into the apartment and started to climb to the roof. The crowd below shouted words of encouragement. Suddenly the exhausted woman's cold fingers began to relax. She gave a piercing scream as she slipped from her and shot downward. Then she swooned. She was carried to her apartment where neighboring women took her in charge. Kochruski fell upon the stone flagging in the yard of the tenement. Dr. Sharpe, of the City Hospital, found him dead.
